vectogramms®

p&p gmbh

As one of the leading companies in interior design the p&p GmbH invented its own procedure of transferring picture information on construction materials - vectogramm®. This computer-based procedure mills the picture information into the materials.

To do this, the picture needs to be converted in true 256 greyscale. Of those now determined grey values a work data will be generated that gives the milling orders to a CNC-guided milling machine.

This innovative technique is used in architecture, interior design, exhibition design, as well as for private usage all over the world. Because of its durability and reproducibility, vectogramms® are used for facade design for every type of building. During presentations or exhibitions this unique type of image presentation captivates the beholder.

vectogramms® can be made of any black and white or colour picture in the ordinary formats jpeg or tif. The size of vectogramms® is freely selectable. The maximum size of the material is 4900 to 2000 millimetres. If there is a need for a bigger size, vectogramms can be build of many smaller ones to form a greater whole.

A vectogramm® can be milled into one of the following materials: medium density fibreboard (MDF), acryl glass or concrete. There a three different methods of milling the picture into the material: vertical, horizontal and concentric.

The vectogramm® technique can be bought as a licence by anybody who owns a CNC-guided milling machine. This offers companies whose CNC machines still have empty operating times to utilise them profitable by making vectogramms®.
